responsibility that motivated Laura Dill to start a foundation to help others facing the same obstacles and challenges, the Slay Society<sup>1</sup>. "Slaying one dragon at a time," were the words her dad offered for how they were going to approach his diagnosis and then her mom's. "And what many people don't know is that very recently, March of this year, my father-in-law was also diagnosed with glioblastoma. He has mostly the same medical team my parents shared and was even put into the same bed my dad passed away in after his resection for the duration of his recovery at the hospital. So, these words still hold true as we do this an unimaginable (and completely statistically impossible) third time."

The role of caregiver is something that anyone who hasn't experienced it will never truly understand. While people offer their best advice and support, being told to make time to care for oneself, for instance, doesn't help when the needs of parents and family are so acute. And caring for someone with a brain tumor is especially demanding for caregivers.

After her beloved parents died, Laura Dill used her grief to start the Slay Society Inc. She also authored the incredibly helpful book for caregivers "Daughter" available on Amazon.com: <https://www.amazon.com/Daughter-Embracing-Difficult-Journey-Without-ebook/dp/B0992K2WGF>

Laura Dill resides in Ottawa, Canada, with her husband Kenny and her three children. The Slay Society helps advocate and financially support caregivers of glioblastoma patients. To follow her passion The Slay Society or to support it - visit: <https://www.slaysocietyinc.ca>
